The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various methods of determining the rate of reaction. The most common method is the use of a clock reaction, in which the time taken for a certain amount of product to be formed is measured. This method is only applicable to reactions which are first order with respect to one of the reactants. The rate of reaction can also be determined by measuring the change in concentration of one of the reactants or products over a given period of time. This method is applicable to reactions of any order. The rate of reaction can also be determined by measuring the change in pressure or volume of a gas over a given period of time. This method is applicable to reactions which involve a change in the number of moles of gas. The rate of reaction can also be determined by measuring the change in color of a solution over a given period of time. This method is applicable to reactions which involve a change in color. The rate of reaction can also be determined by measuring the change in pH of a solution over a given period of time. This method is applicable to reactions which involve a change in pH. The rate of reaction can also be determined by measuring the change in conductivity of a solution over a given period of time. This method is applicable to reactions which involve a change in conductivity.
